

Note that we're keeping the good wood that's up there and framing in what's necessary.

The chimney is down and the the roof is open

It was closed up afterwards and was sealed by the time the so-called Hurricane Bill came through the New England area this weekend.

(FWIW: remember we agreed that the chimneys would come down completely from top to bottom within the house.)

And here is the roof patch closed.
it was dark on Saturday so you'll just have to trust that it's there and the wood below it was dry.
